I had no clue about now I could be part of the action. So everyday, after reading her the newspaper, I would be land up near the university’s water tank which served the community. I would spend hours under it, imagining that there could be spies who would come to poison the water and I had to watch out for them. I would daydream about catching one and how, the next day, I would be featured in the newspaper.

OR

Paraphrase the following passage into English.

Dose the memory of past glories

Bring tears to your?

Dose the thought of royal stories

Draw from your bosom tender sighs?

Oh, grieve not for the throne and the crow,

You who have seen Persia, Greece and rome drown

In seas of oblivion,

You who have seen them rise again with renewed vigour.

March on, march on, march on,

Rousing yourselves from this fatal stupor.
